CHINA SOUTHERN & KLM ANNOUNCE JOINT CARGO SERVICE:
NEW AMSTERDAM/SINO 747 FREIGHTER SERVICE SLATED
TO START OCTOBER 15, 2003

AMSTELVEEN, The Netherlands September 16, 2003 China Southern Airlines (NYSE: ZNH) (HKSE: 1055), the largest airline in The People's Republic of China, www.cs-air.com/en, and KLM Royal Dutch Airlines www.klm.com, today announce new joint long-haul 747 freighter services four times weekly between Shanghai, Pudong Airport in China and Amsterdam, Schiphol Airport in the Netherlands.

This new joint China Southern/KLM 747 cargo service, planned to begin Wednesday October 15 2003, further cements the close working affiliation between China's largest airline and KLM as both carriers have offered passenger code share service between Europe and China for more than two years.

As part of this new cargo accord, China Southern Airlines will launch new twice-weekly service between Amsterdam and Shanghai while KLM Cargo will continue its current twice-weekly freighter services on the same route.

Both carriers will share capacity on all four flights and will operate this new joint European/Sino service with new Boeing 747 freighters which provide cargo customers with efficient and direct cargo services.

KLM Cargo is a division of KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, the oldest airline in the world turning 85 next year, serving more than 75 countries on six continents.
