PEARSON ENTERS TEACHER CERTIFICATION MARKET:

Edgar Filing: PEARSON PLC - Form 6-K

ACQUIRES NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS,
AMERICA'S LEADING TEACHER CERTIFICATION TESTING COMPANY

Pearson, the international education and information company, today announced that it has agreed to acquire National Evaluation Systems, Inc (NES).

NES is the leading provider of customised state assessments for teacher certification in the US. It works under contract with state education agencies, developing and administering licensure tests for prospective teachers who want to enter the profession, teach a new subject or work in a new state.

NES has long-term contracts with fifteen states, customising teacher certification tests to each states' curriculum standards in more than 100 subject areas and providing approximately one million tests each year. It manages the entire testing process from research, test development and psychometrics through to test administration, processing and scoring. Its average contract length is five years and many of its contracts have lasted well over a decade. Founded in 1972, NES is based in Amherst, Massachusetts, with regional offices and scoring centres in Sacramento, California; Albany, New York; and Austin, Texas.

Teacher certification testing is a growing market, driven by the US government's requirement for 'highly qualified' teachers and by the need for new teachers to enter the profession. There are approximately three million public school teachers in the US. Approximately 2.5 million new teachers will need to be hired in the current decade, as 700,000 current teachers retire and 1.8 million are expected to leave the profession prior to retirement. On average, nearly 6% of the teacher workforce does not return for each new academic year and half of all new teachers leave the profession within five years. Emphasizing the recruitment and retention of 'highly qualified' teachers and mandating that all 'core subject' public school teachers must be certified, the US Congress allocated $3 billion per year for teacher training and development when it reauthorized the Elementary and Secondary Education Act which includes the provisions of No Child Left Behind.

NES had sales of $73m in 2005 and gross assets of $16m at the year end. Pearson expects the acquisition to enhance adjusted earnings per share and return on invested capital from 2007, its first full year. It expects the acquisition to be earnings neutral in 2006, including integration costs.

As part of Pearson, NES will operate alongside Pearson Educational Measurement, the US market leader in student assessment and testing. Pearson has long-term contracts with more than 20 states to develop, administer, score and report the results of student assessments against state curriculum standards, and works with the US Department of Education to deliver the National Assessment of Educational Progress ('The Nation's Report Card'). Pearson is also a leader in assessing and certifying professional people through its international professional testing business, Pearson VUE.

Steve Dowling, President of Pearson's School companies, said:

"The teacher is the key to student learning. This move into teacher certification testing is a natural fit with our existing School testing capabilities and takes us into another growth market. Pearson's focus is all about improving student achievement, and helping states to identify and certify qualified teachers and providing teachers with services to get certified is at the core of that goal. NES is a pioneer in this field and has talented leadership and employees who will be great assets to Pearson."

Dr. William Gorth, President and CEO of NES, said:

"We are excited to join Pearson, which has outstanding assets in education and the resources to grow the business."
