Q&A

Q You have announced your profit targets, but what do you consider as the risk factors in reaching these targets?

A Unexpected change in the economic climate and interest rates is one risk factor. We do not expect the economy will achieve sustained steady growth. Although we do not believe interest rates will rise substantially, rising interest rates have been factored in to some degree in calculating these profit targets.

In addition, as our organization becomes very large, our business administration, including risk management, and internal controls become important issues. We consider it vital to continue to provide high quality products and services to our customers without compromising our standards of service because of our increased scale.

Q How do you intend to achieve the integration benefits of 120.0 130.0 billion yen in the retail business?

A Expected cost reductions are a large part of our integration benefit targets. Expected cost reductions from closing or integrating branches will mainly relate to the retail business. We expect that nearly 40% of the targeted gross cost reductions under Japanese GAAP of 240.0 billion yen on a consolidated basis for fiscal 2008 will be in the retail business. Apart from cost reductions, we are also aiming to generate revenue synergies from expanded sales of housing loans and cross-selling of investment products, such as investment trusts and annuity insurance.
