The decision to modify the Steak n Shake name with "by Biglari" is one of the criticisms made by Groveland Capital LLC, which has nominated its own slate of directors.

Biglari Holdings Inc., parent of the Steak n Shake restaurant chain, on Thursday fired back at a Minneapolis hedge fund manager that wants to replace all the San Antonio company's directors with its own nominees.

In a letter to shareholders, Biglari Holdings' four independent directors said election of the Groveland Capital LLC nominees would have "disastrous consequences" for Biglari Holdings' businesses and for shareholder value.

"Their stock has underperformed for five years," countered Nick Swenson, Groveland CEO, who is spearheading the proxy fight. "I think that's pretty disastrous."

Sardar Biglari, chairman and CEO of the company that bears his name, did not respond to a phone call. He generally does not speak to the media.

In their letter, the Biglari Holdings directors leveled various criticisms at Groveland and its nominees. Among them: that Groveland owns 0.17 percent of Biglari Holdings, so it has practically no "skin in the game;" that the nominees never have managed a business "anywhere near the scale" of Biglari Holdings; and that Groveland has failed to articulate a business plan for Biglari Holdings.

"We believe the reform of Biglari Holdings will drive significant shareholder value," Swenson said in a phone interview. "We think shareholders are primed for change here."

The Groveland group will be making public its plans for Biglari Holdings soon, he added. Groveland already has “a select handful of very capable executives” it’s considering to take over as Biglari Holdings’ CEO, according to a proxy statement filed by Groveland on Wednesday.

As for the charge that Groveland has little investment in Biglari Holdings, Swenson replied, “Our investment is material to us.”

Biglari Holdings will hold its annual meeting April 9 in New York City.

It’s more typical for Biglari to be waging a proxy fight rather than fending off an activist investor. He’s taken on the management and boards at Steak n Shake, Western Sizzlin, Friendly Ice Cream Corp. and Cracker Barrel Old Country Store.

Biglari Holdings’ directors extolled their chairman and CEO’s achievements in the letter to shareholders. They described Biglari as a “proven entrepreneur, operator and investor” who turned Steak n Shake from a company that was losing $100,000 a day to one making more than $100,000 a day in the span of about two years.

“Mr. Biglari’s entrepreneurial approach has taken a nearly insolvent company with a regional footprint into a money-making chain expanding both nationally and internationally,” the directors wrote. It’s “truly a great American success story.”

Someone who bought a share of Biglari Holdings stock Aug. 5, 2008, would have realized a return of nearly 267 percent return, outperforming the S&P 500 Index by 175 percentage points, the letter noted.

In its proxy statement, the Groveland group said Biglari Holdings has underperformed various indexes, including the S&P 500, on a one-, three- and five-year basis.

Swenson also was critical of Biglari Holdings’ operating performance, Biglari’s compensation and the decision to modify the Steak n Shake name with “by Biglari.”

“That is not an act that has increased Steak n Shake brand equity,” Swenson said.

In response to the proxy fight, The Lion Fund II LP — an investment partnership controlled by Biglari — has acquired a 14.4 percent stake in Air T Inc., which Swenson heads. The fund also acquired an 18.8 percent stake in Insignia Systems Inc., which Swenson has a significant interest in.

Asked about those purchases, Swenson responded, “I think a lot of people are asking, what’s the point?”
