TD Ameritrade Integration Planning Update
Issue No. 2
August 24, 2005

Defining the New Organization

As announced in the initial issue of our TD Ameritrade Integration Planning Update, business leaders from both Ameritrade and TD Waterhouse<sup>1</sup> are working together to plan how the combined organization will operate, once the deal has received regulatory and shareholder approval. We recognize the opportunity to create a powerful new structure by combining the best of both firms, and in keeping with our commitment to all associates, we want to ensure that we maintain open communication and equitable processes for associates at both firms. This update is designed to bring clarity to some of the information that we know is important to you.

Over the next few weeks, leaders from Ameritrade and TD Waterhouse will be visiting sites at both firms to learn more about systems, observe processes, and in some cases talk with associates. To ensure consistency across all businesses areas during this planning period, business unit leaders across both firms are being asked to follow the process outlined below. All decisions made during this process will be finalized subject to the closing of the transaction.

Organization Structure and Sizing:

Business leaders from both companies will work together over the next few weeks to propose an organizational structure that will best serve the needs and goals of TD Ameritrade.

The initial organizational structure will reflect key management positions, as well as the estimated number of associates needed in each business area.

No names will be included in the initial organizational chart.

To ensure the organization is being sized appropriately, business leaders will define all positions within their business area and ensure that descriptions of the roles and responsibilities are in place for each position. In some cases, the organizational structure for the combined company may be very similar to what is in place today; in other areas, it may look different to better reflect the needs of the combined company. At this initial stage, the focus will be on evaluating what jobs are necessary to make TD Ameritrade successful, not the individual performance of associates currently in these jobs.

Location:

Following the development of the initial organizational structure, business leaders will assess the geographic needs of individual business areas and determine a primary geographic location for each business unit.

While we anticipate that each business unit will operate from a primary location, some positions within each business may operate from alternate TD Ameritrade locations. For example, while many corporate support functions may operate out of Omaha, NE, additional support may be needed at various other TD Ameritrade locations. This is true today for a number of business units at both Ameritrade and TD Waterhouse.

Associate Evaluation and Selection Process:

Consistent with the goal of building the strongest possible organization, we want to select the best candidate for each position, regardless of whether they are currently Ameritrade or TD Waterhouse associates. This means that in some cases there will be competition for positions. Our goal is that each business unit within the combined company will have opportunities for associates from both firms.

As the organizational structure is defined, greater clarity will emerge around which business units will remain relatively unchanged and which business areas will change significantly. While more opportunities may be created in business areas that will change significantly, there will be opportunities for associates from both firms in either situation.

Associates across both firms who are being considered for positions will be assessed using a common evaluation method that will consider demonstrated performance, skills, competencies, and overall fit for the position.

More information about the specific steps and criteria of the evaluation process will be communicated closer to the beginning of that process, which will commence approximately two months prior to the anticipated Closing date.

Relocation assistance will be provided to associates who are offered and accept a position in a location that is 50 miles or more from their current office.

Announcements:

As decisions are made about business unit locations and structure, they will be communicated to associates in affected areas first and then globally to all associates.

Likewise, as staffing or selection decisions are made, they will be communicated to the individuals personally impacted prior to firm-wide announcements.

Associates will begin to be advised of staffing decisions approximately four weeks before the anticipated Closing date. Please keep in mind that timing may vary by business unit, and you will be kept informed of the timeline for your unit.

Senior level positions within each business area will be announced first, followed by other positions.

As outlined in the Associate Commitment Letter on June 27th, all associates whose positions are terminated as a result of the acquisition will be given at least 60 days advance notice of their termination date.

Next Steps

The next issue of TD Ameritrade Integration Update, which will be distributed within the next week or two, will provide an overview of our progress and highlight upcoming steps.

If you have any questions about the information in today's update or the integration planning please continue to submit your questions and thoughts through Zoomerang.
