El Paso's 2003 First Quarter Results

In which the Company reported a net loss of $394 million compared to earnings of $383 million in the first quarter of 2002.

The company once again reported large non-recurring charges. In total, El Paso has taken non-recurring charges in excess of $5 billion, or almost $7.50 per share, since 2000. El Paso has written off more than it has reported in pro-forma earnings over this time period.

Management Change Announcement

In which three executives announced their resignation from El Paso

One advantage that the existing management team had over the dissident management team led by Selim Zilkha was the knowledge it had of its assets and the continuity that this management team provided in an environment in which El Paso shares have begun to perform well. Now that much of the senior portion of this knowledge bases has left, we believe the pendulum has swung in the direction of the dissident shareholders.

El Paso announced that it would be shrinking its senior officer ranks by four, with several executives leaving the company. We view these departures as more symbolic than functional. In our view, they reflect management's appropriate intent to make another statement with regard to its Clean Slate initiative ahead of its important June shareholders meeting, at which El Paso is attempting to defend its board of directors against a proxy fight intending to replace it.

Edgar Filing: ZILKHA SELIM K - Form DFAN14A

As part of attempts to reduce costs (the latest iteration has been dubbed its Clean Slate Initiative) the company announced that it will be eliminating three senior executive positions, including that of President and COO H. Brent Austin. While we think these executives are talented and capable, the elimination of their positions does point to EP's aggressive cost cutting efforts and is in areas where EP will longer be focusing its future efforts (e.g. trading and LNG). Indirectly, it also points to the company's efforts at regime change ahead of the June proxy battle.
