Remarks from conference call on July 31, 2014:

Alan S. Armstrong Williams Chief Executive Officer

The major projects in 2017 really come on late in the year, but our backlog of projects beyond 2017 just keeps building and you really should expect this to continue for some time as we bring the combined strength of both WPZ and ACMP now, and bring those resources together. And the opportunities that that combination brings really is going to be critical, as the nation here tries to get up on a 100 Bcf natural gas market. We think Williams and the combined entity is going to very much at the forefront of reaching that 100 Bcf a day gas market here in the U.S.

So moving to slide 10 and kind of looking at the big picture of what this new MLP would be. We couldn't be more excited about not only the size, the scale of this MLP, but the very consistent focus on being the player in the natural gas space and natural gas products and derivatives that are coming out of this big growth in natural gas. And we think the combination of Williams and Access just continues to load us towards more and more growth.

Just some important things to note on here that are very impressive. In 2015, an expected EBITDA of about $5 billion. And in addition to that, continued best-in-class growth distribution of 10% to 12%, which is really impressive when you consider the scale and what it takes to grow the cash distributions in this business and something of this scale. And so continuing to be able to do that through 2017 and maintain strong coverages really provides an investment vehicle that we think is absolutely unmatched. And it's going to continue to give us the kind of firepower to continue to expand this business larger and larger. So couldn't be more excited about the combination of this business.

Q&A from conference call on July 31, 2014:

Christine Cho Barclays Analyst

Okay. Great. And then, Alan or Don, I think you've told me on a prior call that you guys have right of first refusal if Caiman decides to exit its Caiman Energy II JV position. But, what about on the ACMP side? There are some partners who are backed by a private equity in E&P companies, who may or may not want to be a minority owner in such assets in the longer term. And I would think that they would want to monetize at some point. Would the combined ACMP, WPZ, MLP have any first rights there?

Alan S. Armstrong Williams Chief Executive Officer

I'm not sure what the confidentiality terms are for ACMP on that issue, so would rather not comment on what their rights are there. I would just simply say that we do feel like we're very well positioned to consolidate a lot of those assets in the Utica there. I'm pretty excited about between Blue Racer and UEO, what our opportunities to consolidate look like there.

Christine Cho Barclays Analyst

Okay. Great. And then, while I think it's consensus opinion that the part of the deal of ACMP is accretive, I think there's some confusion in the markets as to whether or not the second part of the deal adds that accretion or chips away a little from that accretion. Is there any clarification you can provide?

Don R. Chappel Williams Chief Financial Officer

Christine, it's Don. Again, since the merger is currently being negotiated or about to be negotiated between the two partnerships, I don't want to go too far in this. But certainly the way we styled it, Williams would take reduced cash flow in the early period and enjoy higher cash flows, higher growth beyond. So, likely mildly dilutive initially and then turning around pretty quickly.

Alan S. Armstrong Williams Chief Executive Officer

So, I would tell you rather than the ACMP combination driving a lot of capital increases, I would say it's likely going to drive, particularly in the Northeast, it'll drive some higher earnings, but perhaps I don't know that it will reduce our capital, but I would say a lot of it would be just higher earnings in the year.

Brian Lasky Morgan Stanley Analyst

And just finally from me in terms of any update, in terms of timing on the ACMP, WPZ negotiations, is there any update from your most recent disclosure?

Alan S. Armstrong Williams Chief Executive Officer

Nothing new. I would just tell you, the conflicts committees are working hard and are very well advised and I think everybody understands the importance of moving ahead with it and with some diligence and that's exactly what's going on right now.

Abhiram Rajendran Credit Suisse Analyst

In your data book for WMB, you show a revised look at the excess cash flow available even after the dividend step up, which is around 20% per year through 2016. It sounds like the remaining part of deal will be maybe modestly dilutive upfront then accretive beyond that. So, I guess, how should we think about the current and potentially more excess coverage being brought down over time once the entire deal is done?

Don R. Chappel Williams Chief Financial Officer

Abhi, again, yes, we'd expect some of that excess coverage to come off, because one of the considerations that Williams is making here is moving the distributions we receive really to the ACMP schedule in terms of those IDRs. So Williams is making, I'll call it a concession there to enable the merger and we think that that's going to drive significant value long-term, but certainly with some near term reduction in cash flows. However, by 2017 that really turns around and we would expect to have a nice increase in accretion, if you will, cash flow accretion on a per share basis. I don't know if that answers your question.

Sharon Lui Wells Fargo Analyst

Don, I guess with regards to the dividend illustration you provided, those tax rates. Do you anticipate those cash tax rate to change materially if the ACMP, WPZ transactions occurs?

Don R. Chappel Williams Chief Financial Officer

No, Sharon, we do not. So we don't expect that to change. The distributions will change somewhat. So there'll be some effect, but we wouldn't expect any material change in those tax rates as a result of that. I think right now, they're driven largely by placing assets in service. And we are in the middle of an appraisal for both accounting and tax purposes. So there will be some adjustment of estimates along the way as we conclude both the accounting and tax appraisals that are really key in this process.

Sharon Lui Wells Fargo Analyst

Okay. And then, I guess, just trying to gauge the potential for the unit exchange ratio to be renegotiated. Maybe if you could provide some color on some of the key factors management considered when you determine the proposed exchange ratio.

Don R. Chappel Williams Chief Financial Officer

Sharon, we did some extensive modeling in really trying to come to a transaction that we think was value adding both to ACMP and WPZ unit holders, really trying to balance the considerations there. So, obviously, a lot goes into it, but that really was the design criteria. We wanted it to be a transaction that we thought would be beneficial to both partnerships, really trying to strike that balance and that's really what we put forth in our proposal.
