Item 7.01. Regulation FD Disclosure.

In light of recent reports on the World Trade Organization ( WTO ) Appellate Body 's September 7, 2016 decision in United States - Anti-dumping and Countervailing Measures on Large Residential Washers from Korea, Whirlpool Corporation (the Company ) provides the following clarification and context.

The WTO decision addressed technical aspects of how the United States calculates anti-subsidy and antidumping duties in trade cases. In the decision, the WTO disapproved of the use of one of several ways to remedy dumping, and asked the United States to further explain and justify its subsidy calculation methodology. Following this decision, all U.S. trade measures currently in place against washers imported by Samsung and LG remain in full effect.

Furthermore, the current trade case, filed in 2015 against washers produced by Samsung and LG in China, does not allege subsidies or require use of the challenged methodology and as such is not impacted by this ruling.

If the United States decides to make technical modifications to its original determinations covering washers from Korea, we expect this would not happen until 2018. All duties currently in place would remain until such time as this occurred.
